Subject: - History of the Origin and Growth of Sociology in India

Dear Professor

I am sure you would agree that the history of a discipline is important for its growth, there is none in sociology. I look forward to your co-operation in working it out. For some time now I have been looking at it, as it grew from the Bombay University. I found it originated under very peculiar circumstances during the First World War. This study is sponsored by the ICSSR.

The influence of the “Bombay school of Sociology” had spread and established itself in other university departments, when the first generation scholars trained here began to occupy chairs in the newly established departments of sociology in other prestigious universities. And Sociology in India developed a peculiar flavour.

There is of course an other important source of influence generated by the Lucknow School, which was set up in 1922. Perhaps there are many, which have not been influenced by either. Today, out of a total 279 universities 88 have established Department of Sociology, 19 of these universities also have separate department of Anthropology and only 9 other universities offer Anthropology alone. This distinction is important since right from start the Bombay School confounded Sociology with Anthropology.

Construction of the history of a discipline so widely spread is a formidable task it needs the cooperation and help from teachers from all the universities and may I ask for yours?

At this point of time I urgently need to know: -

The name of your University and the date of its establishment

Date of establishment of your department of Sociology

The name of the original head of the dept of Sociology;

She/He was trained at/by

The name of the present head of the dept of Sociology

She/He was trained at/by

And if applicable:

Date of establishment of the Department of Anthropology in your university

The name of the original head of the dept of Anthropology

She/He was trained at/by

The name of the present head of the dept of Anthropology

She/He was trained at/by

The major influence, which has shaped sociology in your University:
